

STABILITY OF THERMOELASTIC LAYERED COMPOSITE IN AXIAL MOVEMENT

Nikolay Banichuk¹, Evgeny Makeev¹, Pekka Neittaanmaki² and Tero Tuovinen²

¹ Institute for Problems in Mechanics RAS, Moscow Institute of Physics and Technology, Russia Federation, {banichuk / makeev}@ipmnet.ru

² University of Jyväskylä, Faculty of Information Technology, Mattilanniemi 2, Jyväskylä, Finland, {pekka.neittaanmaki / tero.tuovinen@jyu.fi}

Keywords: Composite, Layered panels, Stability, Thermoelastic material, Axial movement

In this paper we study mechanical model for a layered thermoelastic composite and its stability in high-speed axially movement. We consider statical forms of the loss of stability and apply some approaches, based on averaging of the thermomechanical characteristics of layered composite materials and find some effective modulus of the considered composite structures.

Acknowledgements: The work was supported by the Russian Science Foundation (project no 17-19-01247).

REFERENCES

- [Banichuk et al., 2014] Banichuk, N., Jeronen, J., Neittaanmäki, P., Saksa, T., & Tuovinen, T. (2014). Mechanics of moving materials, volume 207 of Solid mechanics and its applications. Springer. ISBN: 978-3-319-01744-0 (print), 978-3-319-01745-7 (electronic).
- [Banichuk & Ivanova, 2017] Banichuk, N. V. & Ivanova, S. Y. (2017). Optimal Structural Design: Contact Problems and High-Speed Penetration. Walter de Gruyter GmbH & Co KG.
- [Kulachenko et al., 2007a] Kulachenko, A., Gradin, P., & Koivurova, H. (2007a). Modelling the dynamical behaviour of a paper web. Part I. Computers & Structures, 85, 131–147.
- [Kulachenko et al., 2007b] Kulachenko, A., Gradin, P., & Koivurova, H. (2007b). Modelling the dynamical behaviour of a paper web. Part II. Computers & Structures, 85, 148–157.
- [Marynowski & Kapitaniak, 2014] Marynowski, K. & Kapitaniak, T. (2014). Dynamics of axially moving continua. International Journal of Mechanical Sciences, 81, 26–41.