

COMPUTATIONAL GEOMECHANICS

KRISTIAN KRABBENHOFT^{}, SCOTT SLOAN^{}, DORIVAL PEDROSO[†]
AND JOSE ANDRADE[#]

^{*}University of Newcastle, Australia
kristian.krabbenhoft@newcastle.edu.au
scott.sloan@newcastle.edu.au

[†]University of Queensland, Australia
d.pedroso@uq.edu.au

[#]California Institute of Technology, USA
jandrade@caltech.edu

Key words: Geomechanics, finite elements, discrete elements, multiscale methods.

ABSTRACT

This mini-symposium aims to present and discuss recent developments in Computational Geomechanics. Relevant topics include: finite element methods, discrete element methods, and multiscale methods that couple particle and continuum approaches. While the focus of the mini-symposium is on novel computational formulations and algorithms, papers on interesting and original applications are also welcome.