

SOFT TISSUE MODELLING FOR ANALYSIS OF ERRORS IN BREAST REDUCTION SURGERY

Stéphane Clain<sup>1</sup>, Gaspar J. Machado<sup>2</sup>, Rui M. S. Pereira<sup>3</sup> and Georgi Smirnov<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Centre of Mathematics, Department of Mathematics and Applications, University of Minho, Campus de Azurém, Guimarães, Portugal, clain@math.uminho.pt

<sup>2</sup> Centre of Mathematics, Department of Mathematics and Applications, University of Minho, Campus de Azurém, Guimarães, Portugal, gjm@math.uminho.pt

<sup>3</sup> Centre of Mathematics and collaborator with the Centre of Physics, Department of Mathematics and Applications, University of Minho, Campus de Azurém, Guimarães, Portugal, rmp@math.uminho.pt

<sup>4</sup> Centre of Physics, Department of Mathematics and Applications, University of Minho, Campus de Gualtar, Braga, Portugal, smirnov@math.uminho.pt

Key words: Soft Tissue Modelling, Calculus of Variations, FEM, Plastic Surgery.

Breast reduction is one of the most common procedures in breast surgery. The aim of this work is to develop a computational model allowing one to forecast the final breast geometry according to the incision marking parameters. This model can be used in surgery simulators that provide preoperative planning and training, allowing the study of the errors origin in breast reduction.